TUBULAR BELL CHIME
 The Herschende Hall Clock as a timepiece, a tubular chime, and an article of furniture for home, office, or institution, appeals alike to utility, refinement, and musical taste. The perfect movement insures correctness of time; the solid oak or mahogany case, with classic lines, conforms to good taste; and the melodious tubular chimes, sounding the hours and quarters after the peals of Whittington or Westminster, serve as a pleasing reminder of the passing hour. The fifty styles give ample choice in design, size, and price, all showing the moon's phases in the dial arch. We are sales agents for The Herschende Hall Clock Co. of this city, and will send illustrated catalog on request.

WALKING TIME IS CUT OFF

Abolition of System Causes Considerable Trouble in the Adirondack Region.

There is trouble in the northern section of Essex county because certain road superintendents, new in office, have cut off "walking time." That is something probably unknown in the city, but in the Adirondacks, a section of great distances, it is of importance to men working on the new roads being built by the state. Able-bodied men live at such distances from the city and from their work that when a gang finally got together some of the men are certain to have walked miles from home. If married, as they usually are in the mountains, they have the same walk back at night. This became known as walking time; that is, the man was on the job the moment he took his dinner pail and started to walk to his work, even though it took him an hour or an hour and a half to get there. He also quit that much earlier than others in the evening, but was "at work" and paid for it when walking home. The new superintendents have decided the state cannot afford to pay men for walking, and have cut off the time. The result is a great discontent and trouble in getting sufficient men for work on the roads.—Boston Transcript.

HEADGEAR OF FRENCH WOMEN

All Kinds of Fantastic Ornaments Used to Cover Heads for Evening Wear.

A well known Paris painter gave a lecture a few days ago on the manner in which French women covered their heads with all kinds of fantastic ornaments in the evening. He said that it was a pity when hair had to be exposed in wave and color to conceal so much beauty beneath so-called fashionable accessories. All the time this gentleman was expressing his views on this subject the audience was much amused at the presence of a beautiful actress famous for her exaggerated head dresses. On this occasion she wore a cap of gold and white brocade with a high mass of white tulle extending around the front from ear to ear. From the center of her forehead stood a black agrette almost two feet high held by an enormous cabochon in cut jet. Whether this lady will henceforth follow the confederate's suggestion remains to be seen. But it is said that she shall soon be wearing a rose and little else in the hair.—Gentlewoman.

Washington Woman Seeks Office.

The first woman in the state of Washington to aspire to a state office, Mrs. Josephine Corbett Preston of this city, a native of Minnesota, is making a strong campaign for the Republican nomination for superintendent of public instruction. Women have voted in Washington less than a year, but friends of Mrs. Preston, believing she has the qualifications of an excellent state official, have persuaded her to enter the race. She has been causing the old line politicians endless worry. Mrs. Preston is not a suffragette. For four years she has been superintendent of the schools of Walla Walla county and for two years before that was assistant in that office. She has been a teacher in the schools here for some years, an active worker in educational circles, and a recognized authority in the work.—Walla Walla Correspondence St. Paul Dispatch.

Sacking the Animals.

Spader Johnson, one of the principal clowns with the Ringling circus, was spinning yarns in the padroom and told this:

A rube visitor to the city had spent all of the morning reading circus bills and was just going to his hotel when he saw a red painted United States mail wagon going down the street. He sized it up for a circus wagon and followed it four miles to the postoffice and with wide open mouth watched the unloading of the mail.

Bridge Three Miles Long.

A map and plans of the proposed bridge across the Panama bay to Oakland have been filed with the board of supervisors in San Francisco. The roadway will swing 150 feet above the water, hang on steel and concrete piers, constituting eight arches. The total suspension will be 17,840 feet, in sections 2,230 feet long. On the lower side will rest the Yerkes Duane Island, which will divide the structure. The San Francisco approach will take off from the summit of Telegraph Hill, which has been reserved by the government for a light station.

The TREASURE TRUNK

BY GERALDINE CASE
 (Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary

It was entirely Lindsay's fault. As he waited for the trunk check, he forgot everything in the world except the face of the girl beside him. It had been years since he had even believed such faces still existed. Now, all he could do was stand like any other beauty struck male, and stare at her hungrily.

She was not over twenty, a slender flower of a girl, with auburn waves of sunny hair framing in her tender, wistful face. She lifted her long lashes just as she caught a faint flash of eyes blue as June skies, blue as the long-stemmed Maytime violets he remembered picking along the edge of woodland brooks when he was a boy.

Then he remembered that he had just taken three minutes to beat time down the concourse and catch the Northwest express. He caught up the check, and hesitated another instant. She was already tucking her own check into a little suede handbag, and he realized, as she hurried on ahead of him, that she was actually going on the same train.

He had checked his heavy leather suitcase. That left him free to run, but he waited for her, and they passed through the gate together, the last to take the train. Down the long narrow platform they both hurried, and he helped her up the steps as she chose a certain car. And after she had lost her, she found a seat, he had to go on, hunting one for himself. The train was crowded with tourists, in the day coaches. It was warm and sultry. He finally found a place to hang his hat, but when he sat down under it, and looked back, she was not there.

The train had reached the Montana border, and before he deliberately started in to make a thorough search of the whole train, and found her, very cool and happy, in the parlor car. There was an empty seat nearby, and he got a check from the conductor for it. So far she had not noticed his devotion. So far it was satisfactory. He had simply watched her profile and the droop of her long lashes. It was desperate, but his only chance to find out anything about her. He paid a dollar bill to the porter, and put it up to him to make inquiries.

"Through ticket to Moose Trail, sah," came back the answer in due time.

Lindsay smiled, and nodded. He was bound for Trent, three hours' journey past Moose Trail. She would step off into the embrace of the frontier, a native of Montana, and never see her again. If it had been any other time, he would have taken a chance, and left the train with her; but he couldn't. The firm trusted her in the suitcase over his shoulder, and he had to go.

So it happened that when Tommy Tyndall came along at sunrise, he found a stranger leaning comfortably on the bars, smiling at him. He had business with Miss Tyndall, he said, about her trunk.

Tommy's eyes danced at that. "She's awful mad about it," he roused.

But Lindsay tasted a bit of the sweets of revenge when he told at the breakfast table, an hour later, how he had picked up the wrong check, and had nearly lost $50,000 worth of jewels.

Old Ben Tyndall's eyes glistened. "Pretty careless to cart stuff like that around, ain't it?"

"I wouldn't take fifty thousand for the treasures in my own trunk," Lola said, wistfully. "It's very, very precious to me."

"Just because," explained her father. "Girls are sentimental." But Lindsay's glance caught and held hers this time, and he saw the color rise slowly in her cheeks.

"I think you lost the real treasure trunk, Miss Lola," he said, slowly. "I'm mighty glad I found it, but I was coming back to Moose Trail anyway."

"She said she thought you would. She told me about you on the way home, and said she hoped she'd see you again some time."

"Tom!" gasped Lola. "Don't!" Lindsay's eyes gleamed with happiness, and also pure boyish fun. "Well, I'm here," he said meaningly. "I came to see you."

The old man had risen and left the room. Tommy went alone, presently, and the two were alone. He waited, but she did not speak. "Do you mind?" he asked, finally.

"Mind what?"

"What have I got to say about it?" "Everything you know about it."

She hesitated, trying not to look at him, and when her answer came he had to bend his head to hear it. It was very demure, very imperious, and yet it told him what he wanted to know.

"I'm glad you found your trunk here at Moose Trail."

"So am I—hess it," he laughed, and Lola was silent.

The Bookworm's Meal.

Mr. Higley was a book lover; when he was deeply interested in reading he would ignore mere hours entirely and take a standing lichen whenever it occurred to him to do so.

Mr. Higley was of a very domestic turn of mind. "Being up" starched clothes was his chief delight, and starch as she made it was a most artistic composition.

One day she made some boiled starch, and turning it into a yellow bowl, put it in the pantry window to cool. Household duties took her up stairs for an hour or so, and when she came back for the starch she found only an empty bowl with a spoon in it.

She went into the sitting-room. Her husband was busily reading. She thought best to use a little diplomacy in discovering what had become of her starch. "How did you like that pudding in the yellow bowl?" she asked, craftily.

The Mr. Higley unwittingly convicted himself. "It was a pretty mean pudding," he said, "but I managed to eat it!"—Youth's Companion.

ed you of this, old man. Let's lift up the tray."

"No you don't," shut off Lindsay. He crossed the room and banged down the cover of the trunk, knocking out one photograph on the floor. As he stooped for it, he saw it was she herself, and underneath was written, "With love always, Lola."

"It's a girl case, then?" "It's a girl case, then?" "It's a girl case, then?" "It's a girl case, then?"

"And help you cover up the chance you took, a loss of $50,000 while you chased up a girl?"

"It's a lie, understand. I never chased her. I wanted to badly enough, but I came through to deliver the goods to you straight. Now, I'm going back and find her, and I'll ship the trunk to you by express, but you let me alone for a few days."

MAN CANNOT LIE ABOUT FISH

Nothing One Can Say on the Subject Is Too Weird to Be Duplicated in Actual Experience.

Everything is possible where fishing is concerned. This talk about fishing-men outraging the truth or departing from veracity is both, tommyrot and nonsense. A man may manufacture a lie about fish, but it is a mistake. Nothing you can say on the subject is too weird to be duplicated by actual experience. There are fish which weigh 3,000 pounds, and there are other fish who speak French and eat with an oyster fork.

Philip C. Kennedy, the engineer, who knows all there is to know about fish, heard a man ridiculing a story that bass could be caught in the muddy water of the Potomac river by a man striking an oar on the surface of the stream and watching the fish leap merrily into the boat. Then the engineer told this:

"In the hot and shimmering summer of 1897 I was with a corps of engineers making surveys of the Shenandoah river which
